DETAILED ACTION

Examiner's Comments

All claims are allowed; claims 1-29, 31-35 are allowed. See file history, including the amendment. As noted consistently through the file history (such as at page 12 of the amendment), the claimed invention is directed to the situation of using data packets with headers and bodies, during dialogs and sessions.

Examiner's Amendment

The following minor corrections have been made.

The 892 attached to Office Action dated 8/21/2007 referred to references without proper indication of dates of references. The correct information is hereby attached within the 892 of this Office Action.

Please see the 892 of this Office Action and compare with the 892 dated 8/21/2007. The 892 of this Office Action cites the same references now with corrected citations.

The abstract needs to be in a single paragraph. Thus, an amendment is necessary.

The application has been amended as follows:

ABSTRACT has been changed to:

-- A system and method for employing a key exchange key to facilitate secure communication is provided. The key exchange key can be employed, for example, to encrypt and/or decrypt dialog session key(s) that are used to encrypt and/or decrypt message(s) that form a dialog between an initiator system and target system. In one example, a key exchange key is unique to a service pair, while a dialog session key is unique to a particular dialog between the service pair. The system can facilitate end-to-end encryption of message data in a dialog – the message data is encrypted at one dialog endpoint and not decrypted until it reaches the other dialog endpoint. The system can be employed to facilitate secure dialog with minimal performance overhead when compared with conventional system(s). Optionally, the system can facilitate load balancing (e.g., among deployed instances of a service). In this example, secured dialogs to a service can be location transparent so that a dialog targeted to a service can be able to talk to any instance of the same service transparently without any additional security setup. The system employs both public key/private key asymmetric encryption technique(s) and symmetric encryption technique(s) to authenticate and secure information exchanged between an initiator system and a target system. --

Art Unit: 2134
